Sports Round-Up — Winter Season Forecast

by Max Petersen

ALTHOUGH the 1967 Middlebury football team had periods of greatness during the season, it also had its problems. The Panthers won two games in eight starts this year.

Problems bothered the Panthers before the season started when they lost a large number of veteran and sophomore personnel through injuries, illness, and other reasons. Included in the loss were 17 players, including nine lettermen. Some of the key losses were John Hoben, one of the best tackles on the team; Ed Bergman, a good running halfback, and Charles Mlakar, another halfback.

Injuries claimed starters Fred Johnston, Gus Taylor, and Dan Redmond and Jan Rovelli for part of the season. In addition, four promising sophomores failed to report for the team.

Faced with a greatly depleted varsity squad and a small turnout of freshman football candidates, Athletic Director Duke Nelson recommended that the freshman football program be suspended for the season and the two squads be combined.

The freshmen were of little assistance to the Panthers in the earlier games, but as the season progressed some of the linemen saw more and more action until they become starters. A key freshman acquisition was Barry Metayer, a quarterback, who gave Middlebury depth in that position and allowed starting signal caller Charlie Brush more chance to play a wide open game.

Middlebury wins of the season were at the expense of Worcester Tech, 13–8, and Norwich, 40–38, in a real upset. Losses were to R.P.I., 32–24; Wesleyan, 39–10; Williams, 29–3; Bates, 28–16, and Vermont, 21–7. It was the first time in five years that Middlebury wasn't shut out in at least one of its games.

If the Panthers can develop a ground game—they only gained 471 net yards in eight games—to go with the passing of Brush and Metayer, Middlebury can look forward to a much improved season next year.

SOCCER: Despite the loss of two All-Americans and other key players, the soccer team again remained high in New England soccer standings with a 6–2–1 record. Middlebury didn't have a big star this year, but proved it could do just as well with a solid team performance.

Panther players who won post-season honors were John Marks, first team All-American and All-New England; Stu Dunn, second team All-New England, and Stephen Krichels and Dick Hall, honorable mention, All-New England.

Again this year the Panthers were without a seasoned goalie and had to develop one. Stu Dunn, a Canadian hockey star, who had never played the goal, turned in an outstanding performance in the style of John D. Garrison of the 1966 squad.

Dunn had a shaky start, giving up four goals to Dartmouth. However, after that first game he settled down to record four shutouts and permit only six goals in the next seven games.

The outstanding defensive play of Marks at fullback did much to keep the opposing scores low.

Middlebury opened the season with a 4–0 loss at Dartmouth and then bounced back with wins over R.P.I. and Williams by identical 2–0 scores. The Panthers dropped their next game to Springfield, 2–0, but in the next encounter defeated M.I.T., 3–0, and played to a scoreless tie in a hard fought game against Union College.

Coach Joe Morrone's squad finished the season in a successful manner with victories over Vermont, Connecticut and Norwich. Middlebury retained its hold on the Vermont State Collegiate Soccer title for another year.

The freshman soccer team, one of the largest and most talented to come along in some time, also posted a winning record, 3–2, under Coach J. Gerald Alaimo. They defeated Union, 5–0; Vermont, 4–3, and R.P.I., 3–0, while losing to Dartmouth, 2–1, and Norwich, 1–0.

Winter Sports Forecast

With more depth and some veteran personnel, Panther winter sports teams may have an opportunity to improve their records this year.

Coaches Wendy Forbes, hockey, Gerry Alaimo, basketball, and Gary Vaughn, Middlebury's new ski coach for the 1967–68 academic year, all appear optimistic in their outlooks on the season. Eventual success will depend greatly on how sophomores have been able to fill varsity vacancies.

The basketball team has the potential this year, but has not been outstanding in its pre-Christmas games, losing six played. A veteran hockey team compiled a 2–4–1 record before the end of December despite a stiff schedule of such teams as Army, St. Lawrence, Dartmouth, Bowdoin and two Canadian schools.

HOCKEY: The hockey team, with nine seniors and 13 lettermen on the squad, includes veteran strength in all areas except the goal. If the Panthers can come up with a goalie to replace Pete Brown, one of the finest small college net tenders in the East, who was lost through graduation, they might surpass last years' club which posted an 11–10 mark and entered the ECAC playoffs.

In addition to Brown, Middlebury lost only three other players, all forwards. They were Pete Treska, John Sylvester and Ron St. Louis who skated on the second, third and fourth lines for Coach Wendy Forbes.

The Panthers have real strength and depth up front and are expected to skate four forward lines this year. Leading the Middlebury offense this year will be Capt. Blaine Doherty, top scorer last year, Stu Dunn, and Peter Kirkpatrick. Other veteran front linemen are Ken Donovan, Dick Hall, Jon Dickinson, Jerry Smith, Mike Watt and Dave Symonds.

The defense should be stronger this year with the return of two-year veterans Al Lindsey and Carter Jahncke. Supplying depth in this area are Pete Montori and Ralph Sexton.

Ron DeGregorio, who saw limited action his sophomore year, because of an injury, has earned the starting goal position. Tom Harrington, a junior who was backup net tender last year,

Two Visiting Professors Named

Two distinguished scholars have been named visiting professors by President James I. Armstrong.

Howard Mumford Jones, teacher and writer, who is Abbott Lawrence Lowell Professor of humanities, emeritus, at Harvard University, and the 1965 winner of the Pulitzer Prize in non-fiction, will be visiting professor of American literature and history during the fall term under Middlebury College's visiting professor program.

Dr. Howard F. Ramsey, Higgins Professor of physics at Harvard, and president of the Universities Research Associates, Inc., an organization of forty-six leading research universities in the country formed to operate the world's highest energy particle accelerator, will join the faculty as visiting professor of physics during the second semester of 1968–69 under a Sloane Foundation grant for science (see With the Faculty, page 5). Dr. Ramsey will also direct a special summer conference in physics in June, 1969, on the Middlebury campus.

Professor Jones, a writer in the field of American cultural history, has published poetry, plays, bibliographies and biographies, as well as studies of intellectual freedom and literature. He delivered the 1967 Samuel S. Stratton Lecture, "Violence and the Humanist." Copies of this lecture are available to readers of the News Letter. Send requests to: Mr. Walter E. Brooker, Vice President, Old Chapel, Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt. 05753.

The cover of this issue shows an artist's conception of the appearance of the lower campus when Phase I section of the Science Center is completed. Phase I will house the Departments of Chemistry and Physics in a building of five floors with 117 rooms of instructional space. It is scheduled for completion in late May. Two other sections of the Science Center will be built in separate phases and will contain classrooms, laboratories, computer center, library and offices for the Departments of Biology and Mathematics. $1.6 million in gifts to Middlebury's Challenge Fund made the start of Science Center possible. Below, a January view of the Village and Chipman Hill from the fifth floor of half completed Phase I section.

With the Faculty

By

Dr. Paul M. Cubeta,

Dean of the Faculty

The faculty recruiting season is now in full swing at the College. Few administrative activities are more significant than the attracting of brilliant teachers and scholars to this campus. Middlebury's strength as a college is largely determined by the quality of faculty it can appoint and hold.

Middlebury is at one of those periods when there is a large turnover of departmental chairmanships. Last year four new chairmen were chosen, three called to Middlebury. During the next three or four years, seven departments will seek new leadership. The quality of the teaching at Middlebury for the next decade and more will be set by the caliber of these appointments and the men whom they can, in turn, draw to Middlebury. Previously, it had been customary policy at Middlebury to promote to positions of leadership faculty who had come to Middlebury as instructors and had moved up through the professorial ranks—a policy which I, for one, have personal reasons to be grateful for. Now Middlebury also searches for senior faculty on a national level and is not unwilling to engage in raiding her sister institutions. By the end of this decade, only ten department chairmen and none of the division chairmen nor the academic deans will have been appointed by President Stratton. Middlebury may gain in new enthusiasms and fresh energies, but it may do so at the expense of continuity and the kind of loyalty that comes through long service at the College.

The first two appointments made this year may serve as an indication of the quality of appointment we seek to make at Middlebury. Dr. A. Richard Turner, Professor of Art and Archeology at Princeton University, has been appointed Professor of Fine Arts and Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts, beginning with the academic year 1968–69. Dr. Turner received his A.B., M.F.A., and Ph.D. from Princeton, and, after one year as an Instructor in Art at the University of Michigan, he returned to Princeton in 1960 as an Assistant Professor. He was promoted to Associate Professor in 1966 and to Professor in 1967. A renaissance scholar, he is the author of The Vision of Landscape in Renaissance Italy, published in 1966 by the Princeton University Press.

During the second semester of 1968–69, Dr. Norman F. Ramsey, Higgins Professor of Physics at Harvard University, and President of the Universities Research Associates, Inc., will join the faculty as Visiting Professor of Physics. Dr. Ramsey will also direct a special Summer Conference in Physics in June, 1969, on the Middlebury campus. In 1966 he was selected to head the Universities Research Associates, Inc., an organization of forty-six leading research universities in the country, formed to operate the world's highest energy particle accelerator. Professor Ramsey earned his A.B. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia and holds A.B. and D.Sc. degrees from Cambridge. Before joining the Harvard faculty in 1947, Professor Ramsey helped to establish the Brookhaven Laboratory for Nuclear Research and served as the first chairman of its Physics Department. During World War II, he served as an expert consultant to the Secretary of War and was director of one of the principal groups developing atomic energy at Los Alamos. The author of three books and numerous scientific articles, Dr. Ramsey is a Fellow of the National Academy of Sciences and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He holds the Presidential Order of Merit. Professor Ramsey's daughter, Patricia, graduated from Middlebury last June, and he has lectured at Middlebury on several occasions.

Although Middlebury cannot always count on the handsome advantage of a personal friendship and professional affiliation such as Dr. Ramsey's, it is fortunate indeed in having a wide range of senior colleagues in leading universities ready to assist with suggestions of men who would add lustre to the Middlebury faculty. At its first meeting, the faculty was invited to nominate for any department colleagues whom they would like to see considered for Middlebury appointments. Although contacts are often established a year or two before an appointment is to be made, the faculty recruiting season gets under way in earnest in the early Fall. This is a record year, for thirteen departments are seeking to find at least twenty new faculty members, either as replacements or as additions to staff. Middlebury will probably appoint twenty-five new faculty members for the academic year 1968–69 at every rank from Instructor to Professor. By the end of Christmas vacation, twenty-four candidates had been interviewed on campus and over forty at professional meetings or at graduate schools. There are now more than sixty active dossiers of candidates whom we are considering for Middlebury appointments. The various chairmen and I have written about 500 letters and have read almost that many recommendations. We are adept at the art of reading the unspoken criticism and spotting the empty superlatives and the elaborately-guarded circumlocution.

When credentials have been assembled and recommendations assayed, the most promising men are invited to Middlebury for a visit. If possible, we try to evaluate at least two men for each position so that we may have a reliable basis for comparative judgment.

At the halfway point in the recruiting season, we have invited candidates to visit us from Riverside, California; Miami, Florida; Pullman and Seattle, Washington; Carleton and St. Paul, Minnesota; and Easton, Pennsylvania—the College seems hardly as remote and isolated as we sometimes imagine it to be. Department chairmen have visited such graduate schools as Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, and Berkeley. They or I have interviewed dozens of other candidates at professional meetings in Boston, Washington, Chicago, New York, and San Francisco.

The stakes are high, and competition keen. Princeton is not the only university that is beginning to bite back. (She took an Instructor away from us!) In departments like German, Russian, and Biology, where the College is recruiting a new or almost entirely new department, we cannot afford to settle for less than excellence. As the competition intensifies for the most highly qualified candidates, beginning salaries escalate and some universities seem almost to forget that they are recruiting faculty, not football players: the red Impala awaiting the candidate at the airport, the round of flashy cocktail parties, the allure of elaborate research equipment, and even the promise of few students and little teaching.

At Middlebury, interviewing is kept as informal and friendly as possible in order to avoid the slick, indifferent efficiency of some large institutions. There is, of course, the round of appointments with members of the candidate's department, the division chairman, the Dean of the Faculty, and the President. And the inevitable lunch at the Middlebury Inn over the $1.25 Snow Bowl Special while one maneuvers gracefully to the candidate's area of specialized competence without gracelessly revealing one's own ignorance about the reproductive system of the sea urchin, the women's rights movement in (Please turn to page 70)

The Panthers are expected to get a real boost at defense and in the line from sophomores Gary Valby, Hardin Brewster and Grif Strasenburgh.

An offense minded Middlebury team, boasting a 6–4–1 record at the close of the first semester, outscored the opposition 48–37 in overall play and 22–8 in ECAC Division II action. It has yet to be shut out even by such Eastern powers as St. Lawrence, Dartmouth, Army and R.P.I. The Panthers had a four-game win streak going, including a major upset of top ranked R.P.I., when they suspended play for mid-year examinations. Victories to date have been over College Militaire Royale in St. Jean, Que., 9–4; Norwich, 8–2; AIC, 3–2; R.P.I., 4–3; Williams, 6–1, and Vermont, 3–1. They tied Bowdoin in overtime, 2–2, and dropped decisions to MacDonald College, Dartmouth, Army and St. Lawrence.

BASKETBALL: "Regulated optimism" is the term used by Coach J. Gerald Alaimo in assessing his team's potential this year. With only two seniors on the squad, the Panther coach calls it a building year.

One of the bright spots of the 1967–68 team is the backcourt, which should be one of the strongest in years. Teamed up with senior sharpshooter Dave Vanier, who has scored 700 points in two seasons, will be Kevin Ducey, a junior who looms as a potential small college "great." Promising sophomores, from a good freshman team last year, who will supply much needed depth in the backcourt are John Bouffard, Ray Rivera, and Chris Korn.

Much needed height for rebounding by those up front will continue to be a problem for the Panthers. Capt. Bob Reed, Rick Minton, a junior, and Rick Browning, a sophomore, are all able performers, but none is over 6–2. These three will rotate as forwards while Jack Freshman, a 6–3 junior, and Gene Oliver, a 6–2 sophomore are expected to provide most of the rebounding strength.

On the whole the Panthers should have more speed, a better defense, and improved shooting. The development of some good rebounding could give Middlebury one of its better seasons in years.

The consistent shooting both from the field and charity stripe by Vanier and Ducey may help to win a few games this year. The extent of the additional assistance from the front court will be a determining factor in the team's success.

Two starters lost to the team through graduation are Pete Roby and Dave Nicholson. Roby was a top rebounder and Nicholson an aggressive playmaker.

Depth, one of the Panthers' annual problems, should be eased a little this year. Coach Alaimo has a solid squad of 13 good players, who are all expected to see duty.

Although Middlebury has the makings of a good basketball team this year, it still lacks a "big man" for rebounding. Panther shooting has been cool in its first six losses and isn't up to what it could be.

The Panthers have dropped decisions to Trinity, Vermont, Bowdoin, St. Michael's, Clarkson and Brandeis.

Pacing the offense is Rich Browning, a sophomore, with 68 points in six games for an 11.3 point per game average. Vanier, last year's top scorer has had his problems finding the mark in the early season games and is fourth in scoring with 55 points.

The team appears assured of good talent next year from an outstanding 12-man freshman squad which reported this season. All of the young Panthers, except one, are six feet or taller.

Winless in two starts, the frosh gave Vermont a real battle before bowing 85–77. They also lost to St. Michael's, 84–66.

SKIING: The Panther skiers are a young, but promising squad this year with a good shot at breaking Dartmouth's two-year domination of the Eastern title.

The 29-man squad contains six seniors, 10 juniors and 13 sophomores. Directing the team's fortunes is Middlebury's new ski coach Gary Vaughn, a former Olympic skier and ski coach at Dartmouth.

Middlebury boasts an experienced alpine squad of 12 class A racers, who afford real depth. Leading that unit will be co-captain Bill McCollom, a senior and one of the top alpine skiers in the East.

Returning lettermen John Morton, co-captain; Terry Morse, Dave Smith and Dave Nelson, should give Middlebury a crack cross-country unit. Jumping is again expected to be the Panther's weak point and the loss through graduation of Ed Norton didn't help matters.

Coach Vaughn reports that his jumping squad has the potential. Top competitors are McCollom, Gary Thompson, Smith, Nelson and Avery Caldwell. Another promising jumper is sophomore Steve Smith, a transfer student last year from St. Lawrence.

Veterans who will form the nucleus of the team include Morton, McCollom, Morse, Mike Dooley, Wilson Harriman, Jim McGill, Nelson, Dave Smith and Thompson. Sophomores, who will help to strengthen the squad are Tom Allen, alpine; Paul Reed, alpine; Andre McMullen, nordic; Mike Raymaley, alpine; Paul Sabin, alpine; Steve Smith, jump and alpine, and Tom Barrett, alpine.

The Panthers will be out to defeat Dartmouth and regain the Eastern title in the EISA Championships, to be held this year at the Middlebury College Snow Bowl in conjunction with the Middlebury Winter Carnival.

Fred ran for office because he thought "the freshmen weren't taking enough interest in the election." He also considered himself better qualified than other candidates. Fred and other office-seekers gave speeches at a well-attended meeting in Munroe 303 the first week of November. He blasted general student apathy at the College and commented, "Everyone in the class has to work together, if they hope to gain more respect from the administration."

Fred favored a new student government to replace the defunct Student Association, a varsity swimming team, a campus humor magazine, and "later hours for the girls, so they can spend more time at the library." Now in office for four months, he admits little success in implementing the innovations he called for. It took much time, he recalls, just to organize the government. He was also humbled when the administration didn't congratulate the new freshmen officers.

Questioned about freshman life in general, he singled out "a feeling of isolation" which creates a sense of frustration. One consequence of the frustration is weekly Saturday night beer blasts, which allow everyone to let off steam. He would favor freshman driving privileges to allow freshman to escape "the sticks." But as for getting away from the campus for awhile, he must make do with his bicycle which he considers "indispensable." One afternoon last fall he pedaled the twenty-four miles to Brandon and back.

Middlebury's small Bohemian element doesn't impress Fred. He admits, "I hate hippies," who he says, "only want attention with their long, smelly hair and beards." He's had a few arguments on the subject with his junior fellow, Dave Cleveland of Chatham, N.J. Fred's point is that the hippies he has met are "plastic." They have no strong convictions to justify their outlandish appearance. While he hears psychedelic music up and down the hall all day, he knows no one who smokes pot or takes LSD, though pep pills are sometimes used for "all-nighters."

On the more mundane aspects of college living, Fred and Bill try to get to bed by eleven, but they say, "This is usually the time we get through our work. After that we fool around for awhile." Fred manages to make 7:45 breakfast only half the time. He thinks Proctor food "very good" and rarely misses lunch or dinner. A Lawrenceville tradition Fred doesn't miss is required chapel six days a week.

Fred thinks the best about Middlebury College is still to come. He looks forward to taking more advanced courses, which upperclassmen have told him are "more interesting than the 'baby' courses." He hopes to join a fraternity next September, for he believes "they organize school spirit and provide a place to center life about." He answered with a grin a question about his social life by asking, "Does anyone date much around here?" He's hoping that will improve, too.

THE VIEW FROM HEPBURN 415

By John Peter De Yoe, '69

During the day Hepburn Hall's massive five floors of grey brick and windows reveal few clues about the freshmen who live within. At night the dorm becomes a patchwork quilt of light and dark, altered now and then by a room blacking out suddenly. It is impossible to describe Middlebury student life with the subject being that inchoate mass—the students. A gauge of student life requires focusing on one room, to continue the analogy, and on one student, who has had to adapt to the College and then make it on his own.

Recently freshman Fred Reed of Park Ridge, N.J. was asked to comment on his first five months at Middlebury. The morning I first met him, he was busy preparing for a test. He answered my knock with a tense look and interrupted me when I started to introduce myself. "I'm sorry," he said, "but I can't talk now. I have a biology Pre-A in a half hour."

I soon found out that being always busy is one of Fred's characteristics. He carries a demanding sixteen hour course of calculus, French, English, psychology, and biology. Although he has handled the academic demands well, he can't avoid comparing Middlebury to his alma mater, the Lawrenceville School of Lawrenceville, N.J. He feels "the work load is heavier at Middlebury, but any specific thing isn't as hard." And he believes classroom discussions were more stimulating at Lawrenceville, where smaller classes organized on a round-table basis made learning more "personal."

While he hasn't picked a major yet, he likes his science courses best, especially psychology, which he plans to pursue further. On the lighter side, he enjoys French with Mlle. Michele Edelstein, his "first woman instructor in six years."

Punting for the football team last fall took away some of his study hours. When he tried to read after practice in the evening, he sometimes dozed off to sleep without finishing his work. For awhile he tried to organize his time better with a minute-by-minute schedule, but he found this idea too inflexible.

Nevertheless, he was glad he participated in football: "Although I didn't start or play, football helped me psychologically. I felt I was doing something worthwhile, and I had a chance to meet classmates and upperclassmen." He intends to keep active in sports, skiing at the Snow Bowl this winter and either running track or playing lacrosse in the spring.

The large double room on Hepburn's fourth floor that Fred shares with Bill Murphy of Miami, Florida, looks east over Old Chapel towards the Green Mountains. The room is neater than most in Hepburn and "really neat," according to Fred, "on Fridays, when we get our sheets from Foley's Laundry. Back issues of The New York Times and Newsweek are neatly piled near the door for reference. The furnishings are spare; a few scatter rugs, framed prints, and on the wall next to Fred's bed, several arresting campaign posters which helped elect Fred vice-president of his class, an office which takes much of his interlocking elements which are in process of acting both for good and ill. Unless we know whither we should tend, we shall indeed have failed. Let me sketch the elements briefly. They are all too familiar to you—the subject of endless articles and speeches piling Ossa on Pelion in a staggering bibliography. What I hope may be less familiar to you will be some closing considerations. I say considerations, not conclusions.

These ingredients or pressures may be categorized in different schema. For convenience I have reduced them to four: 1) faculty expectations, 2) college purpose, 3) student determination, 4) size.

Begin with the faculty. The controlling premise hardly needs stating—that the quality, the style, the purpose of a college is in significant measure determined by the quality of the human base—especially the quality of the faculty. It is moreover a matter of fact that a high percentage of the faculty in liberal arts colleges are products of the university graduate schools of America. These premises lead to a perhaps too easy conclusion that whatever is wrong at the teaching college is attributable to the graduate schools. I happen not to believe that the graduate schools are the absolute villains of the piece, whether wittingly or unwittingly, the destroyers of liberal learning and the foster parents of the crassest scholarly myopia. You know what I mean, I am sure. The dissertation has been ridiculed and the final oral examination has been called an anachronistic torture chamber. There is the good old story of the bright young candidate who had survived two hours of grilling on the minutiae of Shakespeare. His examiners showed no signs of ceasing the endless questions when one inquired whether the candidate could recite the opening line of any Shakespearean play. The candidate replied instantly with the opening lines of Julius Caesar. "Hence! Home, you idle creatures, get you home!" Despite shortcomings, especially in the preparation of teachers (and the colleges cannot escape criticism on this score either) —despite shortcomings, I believe much that is exceedingly good happens in graduate education—especially giving a light with which "not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover things more remote than our knowledge." (Milton). This is sometimes demeaned by the name "research interest," and then condemned out of hand on the ground that it is naturally hostile to teaching. The fact is that the faculty of colleges today do want to discover things more remote. Such a desire, properly understood and pursued can only be good for teaching, while at the same time pressing the college to adapt itself to this mode. The danger is that the college should try to compete directly with the university on its own terms. If it does, the college will not win, not place, not even show. Here the pressure for change may be either a pressure to sameness, imitation and conformity, or a new dispensation among college faculties. There must be an affirmative response to the legitimate and indeed admirable expectations of

SOCIAL CHANGE AND THE UNDERGRADUTE, RESIDENTIAL COLLEGE

By
President James I. Armstrong
Middlebury College

"If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do, and how to do it." Thus, Abraham Lincoln in his House Divided speech in 1858. Private education, the private American educational establishment—I realize those are ominous words and will doubtless induce a quiet hostility in my audience—is in trouble. As a member of the establishment I was amused and pleased by the policy of a TV comedy team who maintain the best way to lick the establishment is to join it. Then you've got to stand up for what you really want. The establishment is, if not in deep trouble, under a number of critical pressures to alter its ways. Carl Sandburg observed the note of patience reflected in Lincoln's words, the attitude of calm and rational inquiry, and indeed there has been a good deal of dispassionate thought devoted to education in transition, attempts to chart the way whither we are tending.

Let me then begin by saying rather more passionately than may be wise that the liberal arts college is under drastic pressure to change, and how it changes will determine whether or not the next generation will be intoning glowing obituaries over the past role of American colleges, for as you know, nihil nisi bonum de mortuis. I speak not, however, as a Jacques Barzun who saw the demise of liberal learning as a certainty, but rather as one who sees the crucial role of liberal learning and would not spare any effort to keep tending toward the temper of mind which liberates. I take the liberal arts colleges of our country to be the stronghold of liberal learning. How do they fare?

Although I cannot agree with all the particulars of William Arrowsmith's indictment of liberal arts colleges, I do believe we must heed his warnings and his alarms, albeit that both may be exaggerated. "I can think of no more conspicuous failure of leadership than in the liberal-arts colleges," writes Professor Arrowsmith. "With a few notable exceptions, the record of the college is one of failure, at least if judged by its claims. Whatever else it may be, Socratic it is not, neither in faculty nor style nor results. Certainly it is hard to imagine a more damningly documented indictment of the liberal-arts college than that of the Jacob study, with its bleak conclusion that, apart from three or four colleges, the effect of college teaching on student values is simply nil, zero, and that what small change occurs comes from the student subculture. The conclusion is the more devastating because it is precisely on the claim to teach that the American college stakes its case. Here—in low student-teacher ratios, in college plans, tutorials, etc.—it has spent its money and ingenuity, and it is here that its failure has been spectacular."

Remember Sam Goldwyn's famous remarks: "Don't pay any attention to your critics; don't even ignore them!" I fear we cannot ignore William Arrowsmith though my view is neither so dark nor so pessimistic as is his. Yet there are a whole series of

Board of Trustees has authorized a study of a possible expansion in enrollment. We believe at institution 'X' there is no magically perfect number for size. Let me assure all that if there is to be expansion, it will be modest and carefully planned. The college will still be small, of course, relatively speaking." There is an understandable reluctance to grow large, yet the forces at work: salaries, teaching loads, curricular range, facilities (e.g. for a modern science program) library, inflation—you know them and they are very compelling—these forces which are all interwoven with the previous categories create the imperative of expansion, or so it would seem. In short, financial policy and educational ends become inevitably joined, and finances may shape those ends. To some this is anathema; to others, simply a hard reality.

What can be said then as to whither we should tend? First, it will come as no surprise to you that a president of a liberal arts college should reaffirm the importance of the college purpose as that of liberal learning. What it seems to me we must have in our society today is knowledge with a conscience—knowledge which has genuine relevance to the fact of encroaching brutalization, relevance to the problems of an emerging modern world, relevance to moral values and judgments. In a polished and urbane article "On Being an Intellectual," Jacob Bronowski delivers a brilliant statement of the theme that being an educated man or woman (not trained but educated) "means, not being content to remain ignorant of the underlying concepts that give the world its modern character." Science thus becomes no longer a "professional tool kit" but one of the basic humanities. What Bronowski sees to be a terrible loss, is essentially the failure of liberal learning where as he says, "ignorance is not merely a matter of being ignorant of the facts" but an "indifference to the subtle relations within the world, the civilized ideas of nature and society"—the result is a flawed sensibility. Knowledge with a conscience requires a wide-angled vision. Unless there be men and women with such temper of mind, with insight and compassion, "practiced instruments" of sensibility, we shall encounter greater and greater fear and reluctance to adapt to change and a deadening stubborn maintenance of the past because that was a world still understood. In short, we know the direction to which we should tend; the question becomes what should be done to maintain that direction.

Hence, of all the institutions, the liberal arts college should be instantly ready by the nature of its commitment to adapt itself to carry on its time-honored role in American higher education.

What concerns me most, finally, is whether in fact the liberal arts college will do itself justice, for rather than manifesting suppleness, daring, adaptability, it has shown a deplorable tendency to favor the rigid, the familiar, the fixed. Tired as the old joke is—that it is easier to move a cemetery than change the curriculum—it is nonetheless painfully true. There has been a crippling kind of lockstep among the vast majority of liberal arts colleges which has so tied up their human and financial resources that there is only the barest margin for survival.

What we want is not marginal survival but robust vitality. What to do, then? I suggest a solution but one exceedinlgy difficult of accomplishment—I suggest that the informing attitude of mind in the college must be transformed by its own ultimate aims. I mean by this a willingness to free itself from what has become confining—to be genuinely willing to seek suppleness, to find daring, to strive for flexibility and not to yield. I do not mean experimentation or innovation in the narrow sense. I do not mean the simplistic financial solution which like the Ruml plan disregards the nature of the task to be performed. I do mean a kind of vision beyond the limited vision which now constrains us. Allow me to end with an analogy. The colleges, it seems to me, may be likened to the Furies of Aeschylus' Oresteia—those great goddesses of fixed and rigid justice who have kept order among men by relentlessly and unswervingly maintaining the ancient law of justice—a crime must be paid for, justice must be done. In the closing play of the trilogy, while they pursue a criminal, Orestes, murderer of his mother Clytemnestra, they are transformed into goddesses of grace by Athena. They become Eumenides, the presiding spirits for a new order of justice both cosmic and social. What Aeschylus seems to say to us is that the essential quality of the Furies—their firmness, their steadfast refusal to avert their glance from the facts, about this they are determined and properly inflexible—their essential quality is preserved while they are through the persuasion of Athena changed into new and more flexible powers built on the old, for they "admired the eyes of persuasion."

So it seems to me, the liberal arts college is under severe pressures to change—like the Furies the college must not lose its purpose—yet it has come to a time when there must be a transformation in the ways in which it carries out its purpose, the way it educates. I have been brash on the one hand and generalizing on the other. I am not rash enough, however, to offer particular ways for Athena to persuade. I believe there are such ways, and they may well differ from college to college. Of this I am sure, the road is not easy. Aspera ad artes liberales.

the modern scholar at the college who wants to discover and teach—teammates, not yoked unwillingly together as Platonic black and white horses but as a pair pulling simultaneously.

Travelling companions with the Jekel and Hyde "research interest" are faculty professionalism and mobility. The faculty member's loyalty (or value priority) lies, we are told, with his professional career and sources of support for this career (i.e., foundations and the federal government); his loyalties thus no longer link him to the college (which may have treated him well or badly) and his students (who may have been bright and interested or mediocre and casual). There is much which could be said here, but these are really ancillary, tangential to the main issue. What really matters is that the faculty members, increasingly the new Ph.D., have an immense influence upon the purpose or mission of the college—what it aims to do.

Here I think we come upon a crucial pressure to change. This is not single by any means, and it is precisely here that a rich claim may be staked out. One is driven to clichés unless one gets to the curriculum, to the course, to the teacher and student—yet let it be said that the college runs the risk of being a "finishing school" for those who don't "go up"—notice the affirmation in that old English idiom—to the university. On the other hand, the college could narrow into a "prep school" for graduate education. If either of these purposes prevails, let the college renounce its present claim to a distinctive degree at the baccalaureate level, stay the hollow words of president, deans and catalogue where the values of liberal learning are mightily extolled. If one is to judge the relative risks here, the weight will surely fall to the role of pre-graduate school training. It is the new breed of faculty which is alleged to give credence to such a judgment.

The student—for whom, we remind ourselves in the fastnesses of the night, the college exists—grows restive in the midst of the dubiety of college purpose. Pressures for change are to be expected as the student—especially the very good student—seeks to divine the college purpose or to establish one for himself—often in the latter case strongly influenced by his admiration for young professor so-and-so. He then may seek with determination to determine the shape of his environment, some more thoughtfully and articulately than others. This is a large subject which I must leave for discussion later, but this I would say. It seems to me quite proper for students who wear the shoes, so to speak, to tell us where they pinch. What is so often not understood sufficiently well in the heat of a campus controversy is the nature of accountability and a willingness for trust, trust which accepts the real risk of failure.

My fourth category was forecast by Sidney Tikton even as Jacques Barzun pointed to the demise of liberal learning. How many presidential statements have you heard which run something like this: "the college community. (Synopses of Assistant Chaplain Norman Nelson's talk, "Revolution in Religion at Middlebury," and Professor James Watkins' discussion of "The Impact of the Language Center" given during the November 17–18 program appear on pages 18–20).

Our subject was "New Directions in the Humanities," a congenial one, for as we watch the day by day progress in the construction of the Christian Johnson Memorial Fine Arts Center (which will be ready for use in the fall of 1968), we look forward in eager anticipation to the increased vigor and greater opportunity for study, practice, and performance in the fine arts which this new facility will provide. Accordingly, I asked Mr. Emory Fanning, who teaches courses in music and directs the College Choir, Miss Faith Gulick, who teaches dance and advises on the choreography of theater productions, and Mr. Daniel Newman, a painter who teaches an introduction to the fine arts, to share their views on the place and potential of the performing arts at Middlebury with our "Perspectives" guests. They did so with such great grace, conviction, and enthusiasm that I was delighted when the editor of The News Letter suggested it might be appropriate to share them with our alumni-ae audience. In an effort to preserve the immediacy of oral presentation (and to observe the necessity of space limitations), I have excerpted key ideas and representative passages from a transcription of a tape of their speeches.

INTRODUCTION

By David J. Littlefield

It was my pleasure, as chairman of the Division of Humanities, to act as moderator of a panel discussion presented as a portion of the fall "Middlebury Perspectives" program. The "Perspectives" program, as readers of The News Letter will recall (see Summer—1966—issue), presents the College as it is today and what it hopes to achieve in the future. The program, a continuing series of weekends for about fifty guests consisting of friends, townspeople, secondary school officials, friends, parents and alumni-ae, is held twice a year at the College. "Perspectives" guests attend classes, listen to lectures, are addressed by staff and administrative officers, are shown facilities, and given ample opportunity to engage in conversation with students, faculty, and other members of the answering the question, what can I give that is somehow unique? By selecting from the materials of musical art (tone) ordered in time (history) and space (theory), the performer reorders, enhances, expresses through selected perceptual values, and approaches the truth.

. . . Performance groups at Middlebury College include a student string quartet, a concert band, a chamber ensemble, and the College Choir, which performs each week at chapel services and in special concerts throughout the year. A "town and gown" organization, The Middlebury Choral Society, rehearses and performs certain of the larger choral works from varied periods and styles. Senior recitals by music majors, the staging of operatic works, and faculty recitals, all reflect a growing emphasis on performance at the College, an emphasis which I hope will continue and grow in scope and intensity.

. . . A new fine arts center, the Christian Johnson Memorial Fine Arts Center now building and scheduled for use in the fall of 1968, will foster this emphasis on performance. With this facility we shall be able to attract more students of high creative talent and a greater number of distinguished guest artists. Our course is clear, the time is now, we know our challenge, and greet it with great expectations.

I AM NEW AT Middlebury College, and I am very eager to exploit the interest in dance which derives from the course in history of the dance which was taught here before World War II and other courses in dance introduced after the war, which those alumnae who participated in them in McCullough Gymnasium will undoubtedly remember.

. . . Anyone who has studied dance or who wishes to become involved with it needs close association with other arts, with music, with painting, and with sculpture. It takes a while to become involved in a performing art, a while to sense the discipline involved, and a while to know what one can communicate through the medium, which in the case of dance is the body. A close association with music, painting, sculpture, and creative written works is necessary for the richest flourishing of dance.

. . . The history of dance, for example, can be taught to students in such a way as actively to involve them in exploration of different historical styles of disciplined movement. When one looks at an Egyptian painting, he observes a strong two dimensional portrayal of the body. If one moves in this fashion, he would be looking sideways and his hips would be solidly in another direction, making transference of weight a deliberate, conscious effort. If you attempt to move in this way, I can assure you it will take a good amount of discipline to maneuver and control the body and at the same time employ it to communicate something. There is not much point in moving into these forms unless they communicate something. In the medieval period, figures are portrayed with a curious parallel and the weight of the body shifts to one side. Should one attempt to choreograph a work depicting the medieval world, one can create a humorous dance with asymmetrical rhythms and quick parallel movement gestures. One can study styles of movement historically and give them contemporary life and originality.

. . . I can best indicate the dance activities at Middlebury in this coming year by sharing with you our concern for an appropriate place within which to dance. Wright Theatre is, it would seem, the logical and obvious place to which dancers would turn for performance. But even if it were not occupied with such a full schedule of rehearsals for play productions—of which there are many, its stage is designed primarily for theatrical productions. There are large metal grooves in the floor which facilitate the rapid movement of scenery, but such a floor does not provide a surface which lends itself well to dancing barefoot. It might be possible eventually to

THE FINE ARTS make direct contact with sense experience. They select and enhance chaotic experience and reorder it, shaping idealized worlds dependent upon individual perception. Through the arts young people wrestle with truth on their own terms rather than receiving our catalogue of values only, or becoming numbers punched onto data processing cards.

. . . Within the arts music can be defined as tone ordered in space and time. Tones which lack order are noise, chaos, a condition repugnant to ear and mind, as those of us who have lived in noisy cities know. In an academic approach to music there are three interdependent areas of study. Musicology is the first; it deals with the history of music. Beginning with early texts, the musicologist traces the development of ordered sound and establishes a vocabulary of musical style. It is a complex field which, of necessity, relies upon related disciplines. For example, although we do not know much about ancient Greek music, we do know that the Pythagorean and Platonic philosophical systems describe the natural and ethical forces which music exerted—somewhat mysteriously, as far as we are concerned—upon Greek society. Because the Muses dictated attitudes to and about men and nations, the "fineness" of the arts was for these people a real measure, a genuinely qualitative measure, of their society.

. . . Middlebury offers music history courses with two distinct emphases. One is for the liberal arts student with a limited applied musical background, for the person who wishes a general introduction to the art. The other assumes some prior musical training and an audition is often required. . . . As in other disciplines, seminars limit the scope of a particular course to an intensive, limited investigation of stylistic developments. The Baroque seminar, for example, deals with the era of culmination in four-part musical texture and the master works of J. S. Bach (1685–1750).

. . . Because history deals not only with concepts but also with their application, musicology must consider how each work of art is contemporary to the "now" of a particular time and place. This necessity promotes "involvement" and generates fresh understanding. Discovering and transcribing a musical work of an earlier period is more than the activity of a librarian. Compositions come fully to life only through a rich understanding of related cultural, social, economic, and religious concerns of the period. The discovery of the uniqueness of a composition is then the challenge a musicologist confronts. But the final and real fruit of musicological research is performance, for only in performance are all the elements of the work recaptured and communicated in a significant way.

. . . A second area of study is theory. Where the musciologist might deal with the history of technique, the theorist explores and attempts to comprehend the principles underlying the tonal organization of a composition. Musical analysis and composition are therefore integral skills any musician must possess. They allow us to know the details which define in precise ways the differences and similarities between a work by Bach and one by Schoenberg. Form, tonal sentence structure, cadential mannerisms, harmonic usage: all distinguish a composer's unique achievement.

. . . Vocabulary is essential. J. S. Bach spent years studying, and literally copying, the works of his predecessors. Their musical language became second nature to him. In the twentieth century, Arnold Schoenberg, probably the greatest teacher of music theory in our time, demanded from his students strict adherence to "common practice," and rarely let his classes venture beyond 18th century analysis and imitation of that style. Thorough knowledge of past techniques must serve as a springboard for today's creative leap.

. . . The third area of musical study is performance. A medium for individual expression must be chosen early and mastered through discipline, through a private agony of creation. Doing is the only way of rather have me in the slide, than having the slide above me and me standing with a long pointer telling them what is in it. They like involvement in the image. But when I turn the lights on, and we begin to discuss without the image, they freeze. They freeze partly because there they are, confronted with each other as bodies and minds, in a brightly lit room. That shared privacy they have in the darkness is now transformed into a community where each is other to each other, and they really have to look at and talk to each other as beings other than themselves.

. . . I think that the greatest danger lies in treating the media as reality, in turning off the hard world of objects and actual action. Through media students may know more and more about an event but have less and less sense of it actually happening. It is not surprising in this context that a solipsistic sense of the world develops, that enormously bright students may withdraw into their own sensations and "turn on," that an arrogant, egoistic sense develops of "tell me something that pleases me," that pleasure cannot be deferred.

. . . I say all of this to establish the context in which I think the performing and creative arts are essential. For in the creative arts, confronted with tangible objects, or with the body that you are drawing from is really there, or with the scene that is there, growing, changing in nature, one begins to look and commit oneself—whether to paper or paint. One begins to contact what is other than oneself, to transform what is actually there into something that is neither self nor object, into that true illusion we call a work of art. The great strength of the art effort is that one must actively look at what is other than self and develop a rational compassion, a rational love of what is other than self.

. . . Performance then is a constant risk of one's fantasies, a confrontation not with the world of images or pseudo-events but with something that is really out there. And from that inter-reaction one finds out (again and again) who one is.

. . . In the performing arts projecting one's fantasies, trying to put them in shape, and by putting them in shape to make them into an object, connects one with the whole community of art which history presents to us. Start with the performing arts, I say, and end with them, because until students have poured out their fantasies they are not going to ask real questions about the theory of art or the history of art. Until they have broken out of that constant intaking and made a mark of their own, they are not going to ask those questions about history which lead to an authentic life in the present.

. . . In the arts a coordination develops between eye and hand, body and mind, a coordination that is threatened increasingly by our specialized, professionalized culture. Our culture divides body knowledge from rational awareness, and in this division reduces both reason and the senses and ends up with a faded idea of rational analysis and a jaded idea of pleasure. . . Until we recognize that creative performance is at the source of the critical performance, until we see this, we only widen the dangerous cultural split between the analytical and creative disciplines, between mind and body.

. . . We should in planning educational programs start partly with student hungers, with what really excites them in the arts. One challenge of a liberal arts school is to examine the movie, not just as a source of information or as a source of pleasure, but to recognize it as one of the major art forms of this century, worthy of creative and critical study. . . . We should as well deeply connect the fine arts program with studies in American culture, with anthropology, with the history of religion. There is a need for each discipline to become a center, a gathering place—not a fortress—where student and faculty scholars will see through to the limits of differing disciplines, and beyond.

. . . But these matters of programs and interdisciplinary work are not ends in themselves. One finally returns to what one must start with, the sense that one does not turn out students who are going to be just critics, or go on into the graduate schools to become teachers teaching students to go on into the graduate schools to become critics. One hopes to train students who, having committed themselves fully to performances in the arts, will not accept our society's split between organized work and leisured pleasure, students who will seek to establish community theatres, or who will work in the crafts—not just as a relaxation, but as a transformation, not just as a hobby, but with pride in making something that stands up and casts a shadow. Increasingly in a world of automation we must develop students who will leave a mark on their world.

. . . In the creative arts we can come to terms with our present and our past. Through the arts we are connected with the range of history, so that we can see it from our own stance, and can see through it to its essential human meanings. Finally, then, the performing arts are not just to be tacked on to a curriculum as preparation for critical work or for facing the challenge of the business world or the automated institutional world. They offer a way of living and seeing and being through which people can become aware of their own ultimate predicaments and leave a mark that expresses what they have been able to learn and feel about those predicaments.

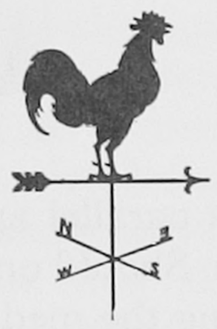
roll out linoleum flooring or its equivalent over the stage, that is if one could get into the theatre.

The stage of Dana Auditorium was not built with the intent that dance would be performed there. However, there are excellent lighting facilities and beautiful sound equipment in Dana Auditorium. And this afternoon we made our debut on that stage. A student gave a workshop project in the dance as a portion of her advanced special studies course in the Drama Department. Since the student wanted some lighting effects and Wright Theatre stage was being used, we went to Dana Auditorium. We were very pleased we were able to use it.

. . . The Women's Choir, which Mr. Fanning directs and has rehearsed, will at Christmas time present Benjamin Britten's "Ceremony of Carols" in Mead Chapel, and the dance club will dance the work. By moving choir benches out, it will be possible to gain enough space inside the chancel of the chapel so that dancers can move around fluidly. Despite the problems of space, it is wonderful that there is an opportunity for the dance club to perform with the choral group.

. . . In April the dance club will present a program of its own. Students will choreograph their own works. Also this spring there will be a series of dance films shown on campus. Included will be films on folk, ballet, modern, classical Japanese and Indian dance. The intent of this series is to create on this campus a sense that dance has a place, that it is an integral part of what happens here, and that it is an integral part of the whole involvement of students in a liberal arts education.

. . . We look to the possibility of bringing performing artists to Middlebury. The possibility has genuine merit, but I believe it should be deferred until there is a nucleus and focal point for dance established on the campus. Performances of outside dance artists are expensive, and I feel that for all the effort that would be necessary to bring the performers here, their impact would be stronger if we had an active student group on campus prior to their appearance.



Daniel U. Newman

WE HAVE TO THINK about the students that come to us today, about their eyes and hands, about their bodies and minds, as eyes that have seen more of the imaginary world, the world of images, than we saw. They sit in front of the "boob" tube. In some ways it is their pleasure, in some ways their torture, in some ways their fantasy, and in some most dangerous ways, their reality. They know more through their eyes. They trust their eyes. They believe much less in the meaningfulness of words, much more in the meaningfulness of images. But they are also, unfortunately, prey to the passivity that sitting in front of a screen produces.

. . . We listened to the radio. When in the early 1940's we heard Ed Murrow in London, we imagined in our inner eye the nightmare of bombed London. We worked inside ourselves to create reality out of the voice we heard. But increasingly this student generation is given but the image of reality . . . and often merely a pseudo-event, an event created by the media. In this sense, students may be much more aware of the meaningfulness of images even as they are more passive before them, and much more victimized by the pseudo-reality of the mass-media image world.

. . . I find in teaching an introduction to art course that when the room is dark and forty odd students sit in that darkness, and I put a slide in the machine, and the slide shines brightly on a screen, and I stand up, involved in that slide, to explain what I see, and they begin to get involved in that slide to explain what they see, they are totally open, they pour their feelings, because they are sitting in the darkness watching a light experience. They would much rather I invaded the slide so that they could see a wild batik of Matisse on my left shoulder; they'd much

Revolution in Religion at Middlebury

By Assistant Chaplain Norman C. Nelson

In all candor, there are no experts on the subject of "religion and the colleges," today. Things are happening so fast and the changes are coming from so many directions that even veteran chaplains are hard-pressed to keep up. The word "revolution" is not used lightly, for we are talking about fundamental changes in the mood, values, and concerns of today's student population. In the first place, the student mood is radical. It is one of disenchantment with existing institutions particularly with the intolerable beaurocracies of big government, big business, and higher education. Applied to religion, this mood comes to expression in a growing dissatisfaction with the institutional church which is generally viewed as both ineffective and irrelevant. Thus the College Chapel, insofar as it can be identified as an extension of the institution on the campus, becomes, for many, a facility to be avoided.

In the second place, student values are intensely personal. That is to say, students are suspicious more than ever of those moral values based on the authority of religion, tradition, or social convention, and increasingly determined to formulate new patterns of living that are more flexible and adaptable to the complexities of the modern world. There is little desire to establish universal principles or to impose one standard upon all; the emphasis is upon the primacy of personal freedom, discovery, and commitment. As a consequence, even in discussions set within a "religious" context, very little can be presupposed in the way of a common value system.

In the third place, student concerns are socially oriented. They are not content merely to protest, but are committed to effecting social change through personal involvement in the fight against poverty, ignorance, war, and discrimination. Nowhere does this social concern burn more brightly than within the framework of religious commitment, which, if it means anything for today's student, means binding up the wounds of the broken, healing the sick, and setting free those who live in bondage.

What does all of this mean for us at Middlebury? I cannot speak from a background of long experience or great wisdom. But I can indicate some things that I have learned thus far and that I am in the process of learning. First, we are beginning to see this radical student mood as the occasion for effecting a more creative and meaningful response to the needs of our students. We cannot be satisfied with old patterns of worship, study, and service just because we find them comfortable. We are being forced to move, question, change. We are learning that we need to make more provision for diversity, dissent, and dialogue. We are finding that we must earn our keep, and that these young men and women to whom we minister will not tolerate irrelevance and mediocrity masquerading under the guise of piety.

Secondly, it is clear that our responsibility as teachers takes on a new significance. Whether it be in the formal academic setting of the classroom or in informal seminar or in conversation over coffee, we are involved in something more important than just the accumulation of objective data and external facts. We are engaged in a mutual quest for understanding, which, if it is to have any meaning, must lead to self-understanding. The study of religion at Middlebury is therefore a rigorous academic discipline. It does not avoid the hard questions; it encourages them. It does not run to revelation and mystery for easy explanations; it does not presume to know all the answers. It demands that the students employ all their critical faculties; and it encourages a creative interaction with other disciplines. All of this is to say that it takes the student's role as student—the teacher's role as teacher—quite seriously, and all that that implies for the task of education.

Thirdly, the growing social thrust evident in the concerns of today's students presents an exciting challenge to those of us who work in the religious sector of the college's life. Interestingly enough, seen from within the Judaeo-Christian perspective, this social involvement is quite (Please turn to page 20)

The Impact of the Language Center

By James M. Watkins
Associate Professor of French, Director of Language Laboratory

Mr. Watkins

The influence which the Language Center has had in the two years since its opening is not a hopeful opinion, but a growing statistic. The fact is attested to from many sides. Our registry carries the names of visitors having come, expressly for the purpose, from points as widely distant as Florida and Hawaii, England and Japan. Our technical correspondence extends as far as Singapore. Requests for consultation have taken us east to Boston and west to Denver. At last year's national convention of Audio Engineering Society, two professional papers were devoted entirely to the Center.

This interest shown by so many language specialists was our first source of satisfaction. A second is now beginning to be felt: application elsewhere of the example set here. After only a few months, the new dimension in language learning facilities realized by Middlebury shows very real signs of being accepted as a principle, a principle to be applied, wherever possible, by all schools and colleges.

The originality of the Center is immediately apparent to those concerned with technology in teaching, but to others it needs some explanation. The easiest point of reference is the language laboratory as it previously existed in its traditional form. Imagine as many as two hundred creatures filing with docility into an area which offers all the geometrical severity of a Midwestern stockyard. Each member of the herd finds his way into a stall, and waits. Distorted protuberances which appear in the form of headsets do nothing to relieve the bovine quality of the scene, over which hangs in silence an air of collective submission. But then—Moussorgsky with the music and Dante with the lyrics—this subhuman conglomerate begins scanning the measured cadences of a Gregorian chant. Methedrine, indeed! No one aspect of the multiversity is more pernicious than this mass conditioning within a linguistic Kolkhoz.

In planning therefore a technical facility to be part of a liberal arts college, we bent every effort to reassert the rights and answer the needs of the individual, student and teacher. In no other discipline more than in teaching language skills are individual needs more eloquently evident.

To that end, we first dispersed the total of sixty-three positions over three different levels and, within each level, separated them further by parallel corridors. More important, we transformed each "stall" into a completely independent, completely enclosed room; each room combines in appearance the characteristics of a music studio and a library carrel, underscoring these two aspects of language. The independent room allowed us then to do without headsets. Among other advantages, this placed the student in a more natural listening environment; indeed, one of the principal preoccupations of our acoustical experts consisted in adding the awareness of a human presence outside the room without disturbing the easy and accurate listening level inside. The absence of headsets further added to the comfort necessary for prolonged periods of study.

The next question consisted in providing the instrument which, in each room, would let the student practice the language. The tape recorders available did not meet our specifications of simplicity, reliability and quality of sound reproduction. Furthermore, the machines used in every other laboratory were pedagogically inflexible; they imposed, after each recorded "problem," a fixed length of silent tape for the "answer." This is comparable to forcing each student of piano to repeat each line of music within stop-watch tolerances. We, on the contrary, required a machine which would enable the student to completely pace himself in practice. Consequently, over a period of several years and after several prototypes we have arrived at our present "student console," an instrument which, by universal endorsement, now sets the standard of excellence for language teaching equipment. The combined use of the console with the individual room was an unexplored technical area. At the very eve (Please turn to page 20)

THIS ISSUE of THE NEWS LETTER revises the directory sent to you in 1962. If you have kept the annual issues of the directory for the last five years, you have a complete directory. If you have not kept the other issues, start with this year and collect a complete directory by the spring of 1972.

The pages of this directory may be removed without disturbing THE NEWS LETTER and filed in a loose-leaf notebook. It is a continuing project which constantly provides you with a directory in which the oldest section is five years old. This is much better than most college directories which are usually revised each tenth year. It is our hope that this information will help you keep closer contact with members of your class.

Space requirements made certain policy decisions necessary. Abbreviations were used throughout when necessary. Asterisked (*) names indicate alumni-ae who had not returned their information inquiry cards at the time the directory was going to press. Thus, the addresses, etc., pertaining to these members of the Middlebury family are shown as they appear in the files of the Alumni Office.

Some alumni-ae are listed "address unknown." If you have information about these men and women, please send it to the Alumni Office.

LANGUAGE CENTER

of the opening of the Center, problems were still arising for which a solution remained in very real doubt. That these solutions were not only found but applied with such superior results is attributable to the efforts, talents and interest of many men. They know who they are, and I take every possible occasion to thank them again.

The remark frequently made by visitors is: "This doesn't look like a lab." It is also, I might add, the remark we most like to hear. The learning instrument we are offering the student is not a lab but another sort of textbook. As a textbook, he uses it as much and as often as he needs. For that purpose, we devised a sign-up system which allows him at any given hour to reserve a room for his individual use and unlimited amount of time a week in advance. In each room he finds the material currently needed in his course. Such independent use of the facility results in a great economy of personnel. The daily operation of not only the language laboratory but of the entire Center—large quantities of tape duplication, master recording sessions, motion picture projection, preparation of visual materials, general audiovisual assistance for all courses (not just language) and events held in the Center—is assured by only our one technical director, Mr. Bradley, by our receptionist, and by part-time student help. Business, sometimes patronizing in its view of college administration, could scarcely boast of greater efficiency.

The limited length of this discussion does not allow us to examine in any detail the design of the rest of the Center. Let me merely cite the guiding principle of this design: the Language Center must be capable of accommodating both the growth of the College as well as the evolution in language teaching. This is why, for example, Dana Auditorium has a seating capacity of 275; when Middlebury reaches its maximum enrollment, this will be the estimated size of the largest single language course. This is why we are prepared, tomorrow, to add to the present superb film and sound capabilities of Dana the advantages of video tape and the screen showing of foreign telecasts. This is why our classrooms vary in size or are convertible to varying sizes, for the optimum number of students in a class will vary with the requirements of each skill. This is is why the north wing of the Center is not enclosed with stone; it can be enlarged to increase the language laboratory area. And this is why, in each student practice room, we have provided for the addition of teaching machines; for, with programmed materials, much of basic language will be learned entirely outside of the classroom.

The Sunderland Language Center serves, nationally and internationally, as a present example. We fully intend that it serve also as a future example.

REVOLUTION IN RELIGION

orthodox. Standing at the apex of the biblical tradition the prophets of the Old Testament called out for the establishment of social justice and for the active concern of men for the welfare of their neighbors—for the sick, the destitute, the poor. We have no choice but to inform and activate this social consciousness. We seek to inform by supporting the work of the Association, a student group which promotes discussion of religious and social issues through the employment of films, panels, symposia, and other effective vehicles of communication. We seek to activate by providing access to a number of community service projects. Presently, there are 30 students working with retarded children at the Brandon Training School (and the number is growing steadily), over 60 tutoring young men from the slums in residence at the Ripton Job Corps Center, and nearly a dozen others serving as counselors to several high school groups in the town of Middlebury. The opportunities for further involvement are unlimited. We intend to see that they are not missed opportunities.

Finally, this added word. Beyond, and even above, all of the programs of academic instruction, worship, and social service, there is another dimension which characterizes what we have called "Religion at Middlebury." And that is the recognition that our primary concern centers not in "students" known abstractly, but in individuals . . . persons. After all the generalizations and oversimplifications have been made, there really is no "average," no "typical" student. They are all unique, unpredictable, unrepeatable, and of infinite worth. And we seek to learn to know them—to help them learn to know themselves— and to learn together with them. That is really the sum total of our purpose at Middlebury. That is really what "Religion at Middlebury" means.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Commenting on the success of the November "Perspectives" program, Middlebury's weekly Addison County Independent stated in a lead editorial: "Real community spirit was demonstrated in Middlebury . . . and bodes well for a continuing happy town. It started when a dozen or so residents were invited to participate in Middlebury College's "Perspectives" weekend. . . . Some citizens found to their surprise an entirely different setup than they had expected, while old grads and some not so many years out were delighted with the new labs, classrooms, and college spirit. Middlebury College, like the Town of Middlebury, has grown considerably in the past score of years so it is only natural that things have happened of which those not always on the scene are aware. What is important is that the College Administration feels it wants citizens of the town to keep informed and to share the same enthusiasm about the College as its graduates and undergraduates. . . ."

Highlights of a talk to alumni on psychology at fall Homecoming

Ignorabimus . . . or Cras Sciamus?

By Dr. Albert H. Ewell, Jr., Professor of Psychology

Professor Ewell

Today psychologists are everywhere. Some work in mental hospitals or psychiatric outpatient clinics and participate in the diagnosis and treatment of mental disturbance. Other are involved in practical studies with NASA or other research groups. Unfortunately some psychologists—even from New England institutions, but fortunately not from Middlebury—have given up all responsibility to themselves and to their science and have bought estates in Westchester County where they are burning out their central nervous systems with psychedelic LSD experiences. But there is still hope for the science. Some psychologists are still in their laboratories studying such esoteric things as the activity of even a single brain cell and its relation to behavior.

To consider all these trends in contemporary psychology would likely tax your patience, and certainly tax mine. Rather let us turn our attention to only one of them: the last, the trend in scientific psychology. Why choose this one? Well, it is a field of my special interest. But it is more than that. It will give you perhaps a sense of the gamut of interests that Social Science at Middlebury runs. Also I believe that some day hence when the objective history of psychology in the 50's and 60's is written, experimental physiological psychology will be conceded to have formed the core of the development of the discipline during those decades.

To get perspective on the present status of psychology let us glance at its past. In the years before the Second World War students in psychology, depending on their college, were at best introduced or at worst brain-washed to one of two strongly antithetical points of view. Those were assured, heroic, contentious, and doctrinnaire days and it took our discipline almost a generation to get perspective on them.

What were the opposing points of view, and how were they antithetical? Well, some psycholgists of that period held that the study of consciousness was the only subject matter of psychology. The opposing forces contended that consciousness was in principle not subject to scientific study, that it thus was an improper concern for psychology. Such psychologists contended that only observable behavior could or should be studied.

After the heat of the battle between psychologists espousing these two points of view had died down—and its heat can be documented by the many thousands of journal pages that were consumed in the fire—a strange and at the time frightening thing happened. Psychologists began to recognize that they had been engaging in a pointless battle, that they had been taking up cudgels and making enemies over a pseudo-problem. This realization and recognition had a brutal effect. For a while many psychologists could do nothing but stand and be appalled with what they saw as the still-smouldering embers of their discipline, at the same time surveying the blackness of the charcoal where the fire had died. Others were overcome with the recognition at last that all the polemic had been no more than the supplication of a dead man's hand under the twinkle of a fading star.

Not all psychologists lived under this pall, but it certainly was an occupational disease of the experimental psycholgist of those years, and especially so if he had ever taken a position on the logically sequential questions: how does man perceive? how does man's behavior arise? how does what man perceives influence the way in which he behaves?

In their despair all too many psychologists, and indeed also physiologists of that period, felt compelled to agree with the scientist who many years before had answered a question about the relation of brain and mind with a single (Please turn to page 70)

Professor Ewell is chairman of the Department of Psychology. A graduate of Haverford, he did graduate work at Princeton and received his Ph.D. from New York University. He joined the Middlebury faculty in 1952 and was promoted to full professor last year. Presently, he is working on a book on logical and statistical bases of experimental analysis.

Characteristic bending of plant's stem when gravity, is canceled out is shown by Dr. Charles J. Lyon, '18, who is completing work on results of his experiment in getropism which was carried aboard NASA's Biosatellite B last September.

Charles Julius Lyon, '18

By Harriet W. Rinehart

"Above everything else, I guess you would say I am a teacher," commented Charles Julius Lyon when asked what he considered to have been the major accomplishment of his life. Professor Lyon (Ph.D. Harvard University, '26), currently adjunct research professor of botany at Dartmouth College, has inspired 43 years of Dartmouth men as professor of botany until his retirement from teaching in 1963.

His current listings in "Who's Who in America" and "World Who's Who in Science," soon to be published, are certainly well-deserved. Now that he is retired, Professor Lyon has taken advantage of the opportunity to do full-time research, although he confesses that he often misses the day to day contact with students.

Professor Lyon's great love of New England, where he has spent most of his life, has made his research personally rewarding beyond the academic satisfaction of discovery. Although he was chosen as a participant of NASA's biological satellite program, most of his work has been done with trees and other plants of New England. These studies, carried out while he was a full-time professor enabled him to involve his students in his research. He admits, however, that he has seldom used paid assistants, student or otherwise, because of the unusual hours that his research requires.

Under his present research grant in plant physiology from the National Space and Aeronautics Association, he is completing work on the results of his experiment in geotropism which was carried aboard NASA's Biosatellite B last September.

His wheat seedling experiment was one of 13 carried into orbit for three days of growth in a weightless environment. His suggestions for this experiment were selected from 170 proposals submitted to the NASA Ames Research Center near Mountain View, California.

Professor Lyon has long been interested in geotropism. He wanted to find out just what—if anything—happens to the growth process under gravity-free conditions. The clinostat, a device adopted by Professor Lyon for his work, negates the effect of gravity on the growing plant.

A potted plant is mounted on a spindle and the spindle is connected to an electric motor which makes slow revolutions. When the axis of the plant is parallel to the earth, (the plant being laid on its side), the effect of gravity is evenly distributed over the whole structure and the organs of the plant seem to grow in a completely random manner, the stalk, branches, and leaves curl wildly in all directions.

The reason for all this, says Dr. Lyon, is that the plant's growth and form are controlled by gravity. In the normal plant, the growth regulating substance called auxin, IAA (indole acetic acid) is synthesized, probably from tryptophane (an amino acid), in the terminal buds of the branches and in the leaves.

Last September, Dr. Lyon's findings were tested by the real thing—weightlessness in space—rather than on a clinostat in the greenhouse. Biosatellite B, launched from Cape Kennedy, and air-snatched near Hawaii, was the first successful attempt by the United States at large-scale study of (Please turn to page 71)

ALUMNI PROFILE

Glenn Leggett, '40

By Roger A. McMullin

Glenn Leggett, now in his third year as president of Grinnell College, a well-known liberal arts institution comparable in many ways to Middlebury, believes that the small residential college provides a unique environment for the individual to develop an effective and responsible philosophy of life.

"The small, residential college, which takes the risk of doing only one thing and doing it well, is a profoundly useful and necessary part of our civilization," says Dr. Leggett, who spent more than 20 years as a teacher and administrator at the university and multiversity levels between his graduation from Middlebury and his selection as the eighth president of Grinnell.

Noting the restive intellectual and emotional nature of today's college students, Dr. Leggett observes, "The best way to develop a competent, disciplined human being is to see that he is placed in the kind of environment and given the kind of tools that will allow him to do the job himself."

Colleges such as Grinnell and Middlebury are trying to provide the environment and tools, he believes. "We are getting our students ready to live in the metropolitan world of the 20th century," he points out. "We get them ready for that world by the somewhat grim process of turning them inside out and giving them little escape from the need to work out their own intellectual and spiritual salvation."

Dr. Leggett, a specialist in rhetoric, is the product of a more relaxed era. Born in Ashtabula, Ohio, on March 29, 1918, the son of a vigorous newspaper editor, his early inclination was "not to write but to read, vivaciously but not discriminatingly, and to enjoy being a young man about town."

He enrolled in Middlebury in the fall of 1936 with "no notion of what career I wanted to prepare myself for, only that I knew I did not want to be a newspaperman."

"It took me only a few terms to discover that I was most at home in courses which centered on understanding and using language," he recalls. "My interest in rhetoric was focused for me by my literature instructors who almost persuaded me that an understanding of words was central to an understanding of myself." He remembers especially Professors Beers, Cook, Perley Perkins, and Dick Brown, the latter now deceased.

Dr. Leggett put his developing talent for rhetoric to work as a varsity debater and campus politician, and gave the commencement oration at Middlebury's 1940 commencement exercises. He says, now, "It was honest but self righteous."

After two years of graduate study at Ohio State University that included an M.A. degree, teaching courses in freshman English, and marriage to a high school sweetheart, Doris James, a 1941 cum laude graduate of Marietta College, Dr. Leggett accepted a position as instructor in English and history and coach of debating at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Dr. Leggett stayed at M.I.T. two years, spent the next two years in the Navy, and returned to Ohio State in 1946 as an instructor in English. After taking on expanded duties as assistant director of freshman English and receiving his Ph.D. degree, he went to the University of Washington (Seattle) in 1949 as an associate professor of English.

Dr. Leggett moved into full-time administrative work as a special (Please turn to page 70)

By Janet Deakins Diaz, '53, Alumnae Secretary

In June 1967 the Middlebury Alumnae Association approved an amendment to its Bylaws which permits the Alumnae Council to elect a committee to begin the work of selecting candidates for the post of Alumnae Trustee "approximately one and one-half years before balloting." Accordingly, a committee was elected at the Council meeting in October 1967, and will select "at least two, and not more than three candidates" for balloting in May of 1969.

The special attention of every alumna is called to Article VIII, Section 3.C. of the Bylaws of the Middlebury Alumnae Association, which reads as follows: "This Nominating Committee may receive any names suggested to it by regional Associations or clubs, or by individual alumnae, accompanied by pertinent biographical material, and shall give them careful consideration but shall in no way be bound to choose its candidates from those suggestions." Also pertinent to the selection of candidates is Article VIII, Section 2 of the Bylaws: "(A) Only women graduates in regular course of Middlebury College who have been graduated for a minimum of ten years shall be eligible for nomination as Alumnae Trustee. (B) Women graduates who are members of the administration or teaching staff, or who have a member of their immediate family so employed shall not be eligible to serve as Alumnae Trustee. (C) An Alumnae Trustee who has served one full term of five years shall not be eligible to succeed herself nor to be renominated until a period of one year shall have elapsed."

Alumnae wishing to suggest names for consideration, according to the above provisions of the Bylaws, may do so by writing to the Committee chairman, Mrs. George H. Patrick III (Constance Sherman, '53), 6329 King Louis Drive, Alexandria, Virginia. The members of her Committee are: Mrs. Ernest M. According to information received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred M. Russ of Hancock, N.H., Lt. Russ died from "fragmentation wounds to the body" he received from "a hostile device while engaged in action against enemy forces." He had served in Vietnam since last June, but had been in combat action for only two weeks. He had requested combat duty after serving several months with a Military Police unit outside Da Nang. His brother, Lt. Robert Russ, an intelligence officer in the Air Force, is stationed in Vietnam.

He also played short stop for Middlebury's baseball team and was an outstanding goalie on the Panther lacrosse team.

A graduate of Phillips Andover Academy, Lt. Russ majored in Spanish at the College. He was enrolled in the Marine Corps Platoon Leader program at Middlebury and was commissioned a second lieutenant upon graduation. Following his graduation from Middlebury, Mr. Akers attended Syracuse University and was then in advertising promotion with McGraw-Hill and production control with Sperry Gyroscope Company until 1944 when he served in the Navy for two years during World War II. In 1946 he became associate editor of AUTOMOTIVE RETAILER. For the past few years he had been manager of development with the U. S. Rubber Company. Survivors are his wife, the former Rita Lewis, a son, James, and a daughter, Mary. Mr. Akers was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Alfred M. Dame

Alfred M. Dame, emeritus professor of Latin and Greek, died on Dec. 24 in Palm Beach, Florida. He was 87 years old.

In the death of Professor Dame, Middlebury College lost its oldest retired teacher. He was well known to earlier generations of alumni. In his teaching he was exacting. He was always difficult to satisfy as far as his standards of performance were concerned. Yet he was completely dedicated to his students and their success. Time and effort were of no consequence when he sought to help a student who was having difficulty.

Professor Dame received his master's degree from Harvard University in 1902. He taught classical studies at Williams College before joining the Middlebury faculty in 1928.

He retired in June 1944 and spent winters in Florida and summers in New Hampshire. His retirement hobbies included travel, photography, and nature study. Professor Dame's travel included trips to the West Indies, Central and South America, Alaska, Scandinavia, the Mediterranean and South Pacific Islands as far south as New Zealand and as far west as Bali and the Philippines.

Survivors are Major James. G. Adams, a nephew living in Palm Beach and Constance Stevens, a niece of Brockton, Mass. Interment was in Pine Grove Cemetery, Thornton, N. H.

from close associations with students to final decisions on college budgets.

He assumed the presidency of Grinnell on September 1, 1965.

The primary responsibilities of a college president are two-fold in Dr. Leggett's view: first, to improve the quality of the academic program, chiefly by a discriminating choice of faculty, and, second, to find the funds to make possible the necessary improvements in staff and programs.

Despite the time-consuming nature of these duties, Dr. Leggett remains by instinct and preference a teacher-scholar with a deep concern and abiding interest in the development of the young mind. And he shares a concern for his students in terms of their intellectual and emotional development.

"A college cannot meet its obligation to its students either by adopting an attitude of tyrannical control or by abdication from any concern," he says. "We must help students create a society for themselves that is both free and orderly enough to let them develop their personalities along lines that show them that freedom without discipline is chaotic self-indulgence and that order without room for individuality is repressive and static, offering no opportunity for growth and maturity."

Dr. Leggett has gained a national reputation for his scholarly activities in the area of English. He has authored several books, one of which, Handbook for Writers, has gone into its fourth printing and is widely used in writing courses. He has also written numerous monographs and is co-author or editor of several other books and anthologies.

The Leggett family, which includes four daughters, was recently increased in size with the birth of the first grandchild, a boy. The two older daughters are married; the younger two are students—one at Rockford College and one in elementary school in Grinnell.

the basic biology of the space environment.

Professor Lyon's experiment, along with 12 others involving plants and simple animals, carried in an unmanned spacecraft, was the clinostat to eliminate the effects of gravity in the laboratory. The results of the three day flight strongly corroborated Professor Lyon's expectations as to how a plant would grow in a weightless environment.

Not all of Professor Lyon's research has been as "far out" as the space program and weightless environments. His love of New England and familiarity with the Hanover area served him well in his work with New England's vegetation.

In 1942, Professor Lyon predicted a severe drought in New England. His research has led him to believe that water supplies occur in cycles of 23 (or multiples of 23) years. In his predictions, based on a 46-year weather cycle for this area observed in that year, Dr. Lyon observed that during dry growing seasons the width of the ring of new wood for that year is thinner than average. Conversely, a wet season results in more growth and wider rings.

It appears likely from Professor Lyon's research that growing years are better when March and April are warm enough to take the frost out of the ground early so that snow and spring rain water can seep into the ground instead of running off into rivers. Ironically enough, this is something that New Englanders believed for decades but that had never been proven by science.

Perhaps it is not always "an ill wind that blows nobody good"—Professor Lyon's opportunity for some of this study came after the 1938 New England hurricane blew down trees on a hill where the rainfall had been continuously recorded since 1862 and the daily mean temperature recorded since 1876.

Professor Lyon's work in New England has not been limited to New Hampshire. In 1931, along with a group of students, Professor Lyon undertook to determine the rate of submergence of the North Atlantic coast. He again looked at the growth rings of trees, this time at the various stumps rooted in the sea bottom or in adjacent salt marshes. The chief purpose of his research into the history of the coastline was to determine, if possible, whether the trees sank beneath the sea as a result of a subsidence of the shore or in consequence of an actual elevation of the ocean level. Radiocarbon dating eventually enabled him to determine the age of the pine stumps in these drowned forests.

Trees are not the only aspect of 'New Englandology' which seems to have been Professor Lyon's specialty over the years. He has also discovered that ground granite can be used as low grade fertilizer, being a valuable source of potassium. This was particularly significant not only for New England, which abounds in granite, but for many other parts of the world where crop soils are deficient in potassium.

A true Horatio Alger, Professor Lyon worked his way through Middlebury to graduate valedictorian and summa cum laude. His spirit, ease of manner, and obvious love of teaching anyone interested are valuable memories of many Dartmouth students who thank Middlebury for its valuable contribution to the field of biological education.

CORRECTION

The John C. Saur, '22, gift was omitted from the "1967 Report of Annual Giving" published as a supplement to the Autumn Issue of THE NEWS LETTER and listing the permanent funds composing the Alumni Endowment of the Alumni Fund. This permanent fund in Middlebury's endowment was established by gifts from associates and friends of John C. Saur, '22, to honor him upon his retirement in 1966 from the General Electric Company. Executives and friends from various General Electric offices and plants throughout the United States participated in the project. Their contributions were supplemented by a generous personal gift of Mr. Saur and matching gifts from the General Electric Company under its Corporate Alumnus Program. The permanent records of the College record this singular honor to Mr. Saur in the Alumni Endowment of the Alumni Fund as follows:

John C. Saur Gift

Given by associates and friends of John C. Saur '22 upon his retirement from the General Electric Company, supplemented by the personal contribution of Mr. Saur.

Massachusetts in the 1890's, or the symbolism in the works of Chekhov. If a candidate's wife joins him for the visit, faculty wives are pressed into service to suggest the flavor of Middlebury living: a look at the local schools, a trip to a new building site in Cornwall, or perhaps even to the Snow Bowl, where one candidate's wife admitted not only to possessing her doctorate but also to having attended Olympic skiing tryouts. And at that illuminating moment, I knew we had little to fear, in that case, from our Ivy League competition.

word: "Ignorabimus" . . . we shall not know.

But out of the embers and smouldering ruins hopes of a new life, nevertheless, began to arise. Through some extraordinary happenstances a few psychologists and a few physiologists who felt that there was comfort in the journey even though they might never arrive found themselves journeying together. By the late 40's, also, technological development was beginning to offer the possibility of instrumentation for the problems such men were posing. The development of the electron microscope, of the low noise and more stable transistor amplifier, and of extremely fine micro-electrodes—these and other developments were making possible a fineness of observation such that, when necessary, the activity of just one of the ten billion brain cells could be studied.

With such instrumentation, and with a hope that was almost, and perhaps only, a prayer, these teams of psychologists who were interested in physiology and physiologists who were interested in psychology began to mount a new and heroic attack on the problems of the relation of brain and mind. Wisened by the mistakes of the past these men did not make the old errors: they ordinarily tried to stay away from pseudo-problems, they ordinarily held off on developing theory until they had a solid base of data from which to work. One feels, indeed, that often their researches arose from nothing more programmatic or theoretically pretentious than simple curiosity. And maybe this was just the way it had to be.

In any case, first approximations to answers—answers which only a few years before had been deemed impossible—started to appear. A neural region, the reticular activating system, which stretches more or less from the top of the spinal cord to a region deep between the cerebral hemispheres, was found to have a signal role in consciousness and attention. This finding was very, very exciting. It promised empirical knowledge as a substitute for previous rationalistic speculation about the bases of perception.

Another region, another complex package of brain-nuclei, was also explored extensively. This region is called the limbic system because it more or less marks the border between the phylogenetically younger and phylogenetically older parts of the brain. While the reticular activating system is implicated in consciousness, the limbic system is intimately implicated in emotional response and in learning.

And note here: words and concepts like consciousness and emotion, once interdicted by one of the scientific schools, were again being seriously considered. But they were being considered in the context of careful, objective, scientific study. It was indeed from this amalgam of interest and scientific method, this compromise arising from broadened perspective rather than from arrogance, that the present strength of physiological psychology has come.

In this hasty survey of the new life of physiological psychology there is yet another vital source that cannot go unmentioned. Recently some exciting researches have been devoted to study of activity of single brain cells, particularly in the visual part of the brain. They strongly suggest that there may be single brain cells that respond when the visual stimulus is a square and others that respond when the stimulus is of a different form: say, a straight line. We indeed do seem to be getting close to an understanding of the first of our earlier sequential questions, 'How does man perceive?' And since the questions are sequential, since we seem to be approaching a satisfactory answer to the first of them, we are imbued with much hope that the others will one day yield to our investigations.

What has all of this to do specifically with psychology at Middlebury? Perhaps you already have a subliminal answer to that question: we, the psychology department at Middlebury, are deeply excited by these developing answers. But there is a more tangible effect. In the past four years our students have been provided with facilities in terms of which they can themselves, in regular course work or in Honors, actually study some limited problems in this engrossing field of research. Further, a member of the psychology faculty is now conducting his own research on the forefronts of these problems, under a grant from the National Institutes of Health. He is seeking to explicate some problems in the function of the auditory system in much the same way that the previously mentioned single cell work is explaining visual perception. Nor is his work seclusive or exclusive. His grant proposal specifically requested, and was authorized to permit, student participation and collaboration directly in his research.

Many people don't understand modern experimental or physiological psychology because it has taken the turns that it has. The old problems are no longer of interest to most psychologists because we have seen through their superficiality. The new problems have not yet found many extramural polemicists. For the men working in the field, it seems almost enough now to have some hope and belief in the maxim, "Cras Sciamus," . . . tomorrow we may know. These men are confident that if tomorrow we do know, then the day after people will understand.
